The bullet entered the abdomen, passed through the liver, fractured horizontally, and lower rib on the right side and emerged at the back. There was a considerable amount of bloody serum in the abdominal cavity, and excessive inflammation of the peritoneum.

The cause of death was from the wounds inflicted by the bullet, it did not enter the chest.

By the jury, from the direction the ball took, apparently the person who fired the shot was above the person who was shot.

The San Juan Question.

(New York Herald Tribune.)

Now that the danger of a disruption of the peace of the Geneva tribunal is past, the Emperor of Germany, to whom the United States and England submitted the San Juan question, has placed into the hands of the Emperor a copy of the documents bearing upon the subject, and as the matter is a very complicated one, we may, owing to the excellent geographers of which Germany has no lack, expect a verdict in a very short time. Great interest will attach to this decision, not so much on account of the Emperor's decision, which connection, indeed, was the matter is more formal than otherwise, as because of the fact that German science and learning will be brought into the decision with its partial justice a controversy in which the two parties have each for so many years contended with the greatest obstinacy and sincere conviction for the correctness of its standpoint.

There is something very peculiar with regard to the phraseology of treaties.—Had the Washington treaty been a little more precise and definite in its statements, England and the United States would not have been under the necessity of quarreling for half a year over the indirect damage, and had there been a little more care exercised in the Ashburton, or Oregon treaty, in 1846, there would have been no San Juan question, which at one time assumed a very threatening aspect, and might have easily brought about a third war between England and the United States.

At the time that treaty was made, which fixes the boundaries between the British and the American possessions, on the island of San Juan and the Gulf of Haro, and for this reason it was neglected to specify definitely on which side of the proposed boundary line the island lay. It was owing to this neglect that the San Juan question has arisen, and the island, lying between Vancouver Island and the mainland, became of some importance. Both powers at once claimed it, and the English, at the base of the British—though the English on their part, denied the fact—Harney in the fall of 1858, occupied the island with a few hundred troops.

The English became very much excited over the matter, and threatened to drive out the Americans by force of arms; he, however, soon reconsidered the matter, and contented himself with a solemn protest. The English Government sent a sharp note to Washington, and the American Government had answered in the same manner, the controversy might have quickly assumed a serious aspect, but President Buchanan, however, showed a conciliatory disposition. He explained that Gen. Harney had not occupied the island by the order of Government, but that in his capacity of commanding general in the Oregon Territory he had felt himself authorized and obligated to do so, and when after this the British Government gave way a little, it was agreed that, for the time being, the island should be jointly occupied, the English on the southern part, a space of 55 miles to intervene between them.

This has been the condition of affairs for the last fourteen years. The English have in the meantime repeatedly made the offer of arbitration, but the American Government has refused in matter where the object is in dispute was of such importance, and their right so clear, to submit to the decision of a court of arbitration, and the negotiation with reference to the island was a question of the right to yield the point with a view to having all questions in controversy between the countries definitely settled, and the Emperor of Germany was agreed upon to give a decision upon this question.

And the United States could not have placed their interest in better hands. They might indeed, have been assured of the most scrupulous impartiality in the case of any other arbitrator, but not in an equal degree of the pacific and the strict conformity of the facts to the case with the decision arrived at. German scholars will see to it that the honor of the German Empire shall not be dishonored by the result of a court of arbitration, and as all geographical, historical and international questions will be examined with the utmost care, the final result, uninfluenced by any other motives, will be in strict accordance with the truth, and all parties will have the satisfaction of being convinced of the justice of the same.
